Building a trustworthy national data research infrastructure: A UK-wide public dialogue

Follow-up workshop agenda, Tuesday 22 February 2022

During the initial workshops, discussions were recorded. The dialogue was coded and themed by researchers to summarise what is important to participants when sensitive data is used in research. Those summaries were emailed to participants a week before the follow-up workshop and presented during the workshop itself.

During the workshop, we wanted to explore the following questions with participants:
- Does this summary accurately reflect your discussions at the first workshop?
- What would you add? What are you not sure about/would like to change?
- Are there any actions that you think could/should be taken forward by those handling and using sensitive data for research, to address your interests and concerns? What is needed to both demonstrate trustworthiness and support research at scale for public good?

Workshop agenda

Time	Activity
09.45	Main room opened for welcomes
10.00	Introduction Participants were given a short reminder of DARE UK's aims and goals, and the scope of the public dialogue. There was also a quick reminder of some key concepts.
10.10	Questions and reflections Participants were asked if any feelings had changed or any questions had emerged since the initial workshops.
10.15	Presentation: Summary of findings from initial workshops
10.25	Reflection of summary of findings Participants were then asked to discuss whether they agreed the findings presented accurately reflected their views and their perception of the discussions had during the initial workshops.
10.50	Comfort break
11.00	Activity: Shaping actions Participants were then asked to discuss actions they felt could/should be taken forward by those handling and using sensitive data for research to address their views. They were asked what they think currently works well, and what could be changed to address the interests and concerns expressed in the workshops. Each of the two breakout groups started with three of the summary themes, and then swapped over after 30 minutes.
11.55	Thank you and next steps
12.00	Close
